- ❖ In both electoral periods, the district with the highest count of incidents remained Lilongwe followed by Blantyre.
- ❖ Most conflicts took place in the southern region in 2019, in 2020 the cases spread out throughout all three regions.
- ❖ Despite conflict taking place in almost all districts, the count of incidents during the electoral period dropped by 39.87% in 2020.

WEEKLY TREND

In both electoral periods the count of conflict cases was relatively high before the election but dropped after the election.

However, in 2019, we can see how the trend line started going high again in mid-June, this was due to the politically motivated protests that opposition party supporters and HRDC members embarked on.

This has not been the case in 2020, the only cases recorded after the election have been economically motivated i.e. staff striking due to unsettled salary arrears.

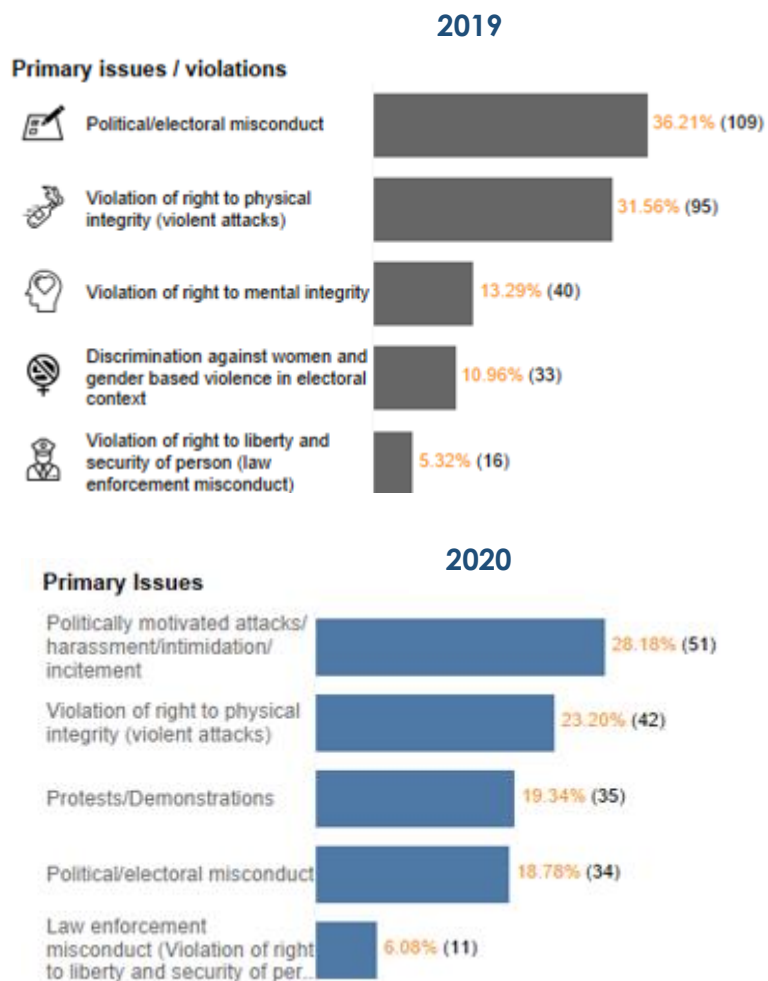

PRIMARY ISSUES

In 2019, the highest number of cases was in relation to political/electoral misconduct were locals disregarded campaign and election laws. There were also a lot of cases of violent physical attacks and burning down of property particularly targeting political party affiliates and MEC officials

In 2020, the highest number of cases was in relation to politically motivated attacks which included hate speech, intimidation and harassment. There were also a lot of physical attacks against party affiliates.

In 2020, there was also an alarming number of protests recorded unlike in 2019. However, these protests were motivated by political, social and economical reasons.

Other notable factors

- ❖ The high number of cases in 2019 could be attributed to the fact that three elections were taking place at the same time (Councilor, Parliamentary and Presidential elections). This is not the case in 2020 as we only had Presidential elections.
- ❖ Perhaps there were more strict election management rules in 2020 leaving no room for a lot of political/electoral misconduct cases.
- ❖ In 2020, there has been a reduction in the count of issues after the election most likely because majority of voters voted for this regime hence it is enjoying legitimacy, the new opposition also accepted defeat which means we should not anticipate politically motivated demonstrations in relation to the election.
